

OC12061

ERIC YEBOAH.

LAUREA UNIVERSITY OF APPLIED SCIENCE, FINLAND

SCHOOL OF MANAGEMENT

Graduate entrepreneurship an alternative in the 21st century

Abstract:

Countries in recent times have high rates of graduate unemployment, which might be as a result of skills mismatch, there is also regular cuts in employment by companies and states in order to control their spending as a result of eminent global economic crisis. There is the possibility that many graduates would therefore return for further studies rather than staying unemployed. With my interest in entrepreneurship, this article would focus on barriers that prevent graduates from taking entrepreneurial planning at these critical moments, and other factors that deter self-establishment as an option after graduation.