

OC13050

Teachers have long been traditional beings. However, a recent study reveals that pre-service teachers are more divergent than ever before. After analysis of responses on the Taylor Sorting Protocol, an instrument that measures divergence, teachers of the future are seemingly more divergent. Through a point biserial analysis of age and gender as related to divergence, the level of divergence in male pre-service teachers was found to be statistically significant.